Trello

trello.com

Trello is the free, flexible, and visual way to organize anything with anyone.

Drop the lengthy email threads, out-of-date spreadsheets, no-longer-so-sticky notes, and clunky software for managing your projects. Trello lets you see everything about your project in a single glance.

Sign Up – It's Free.

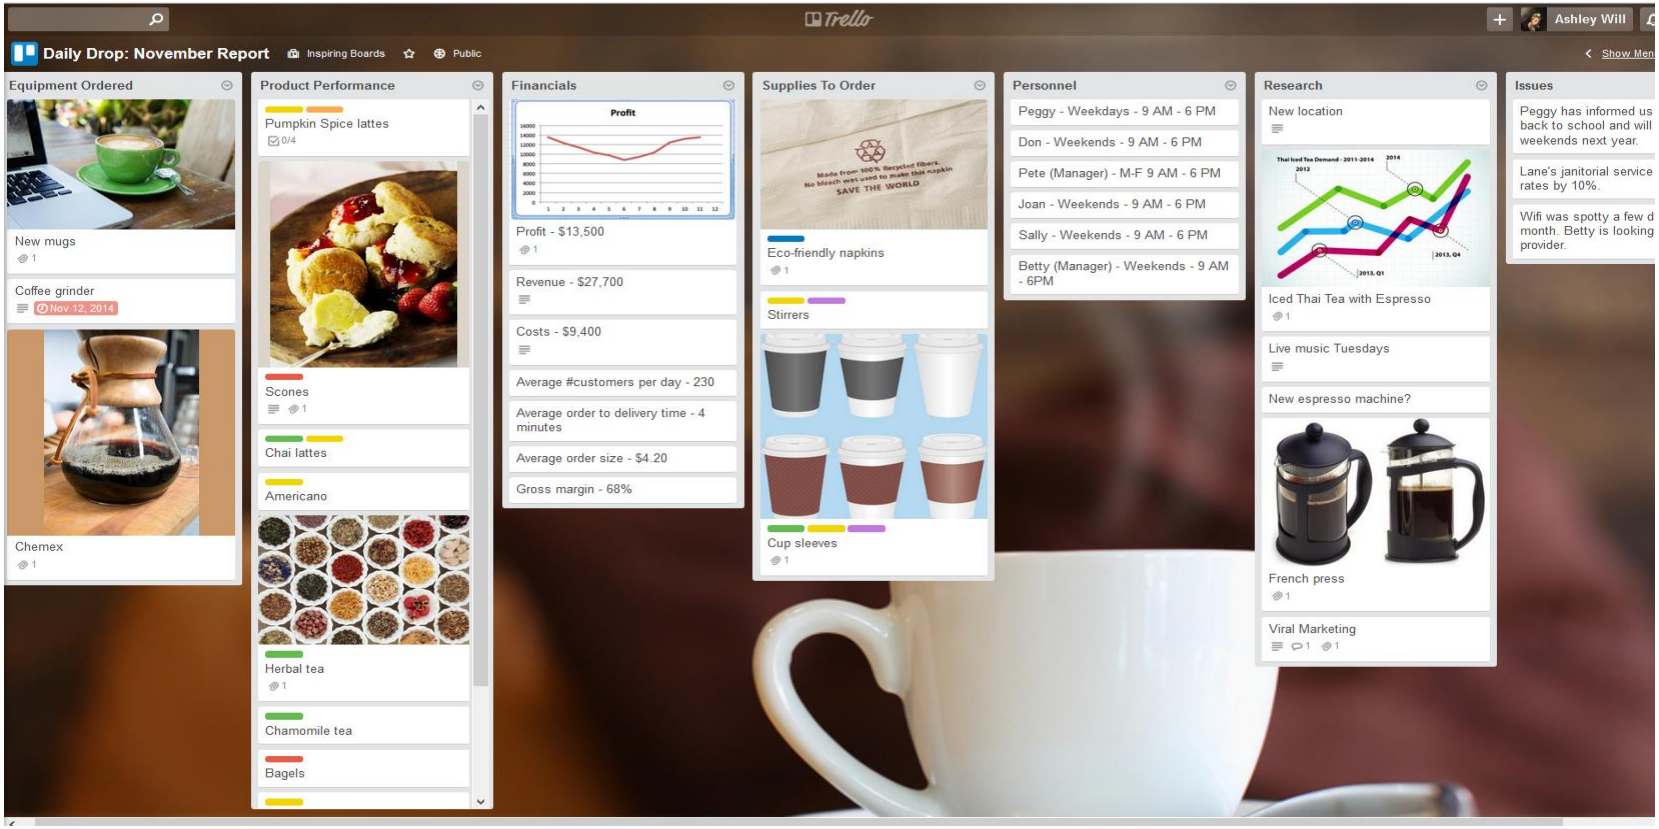
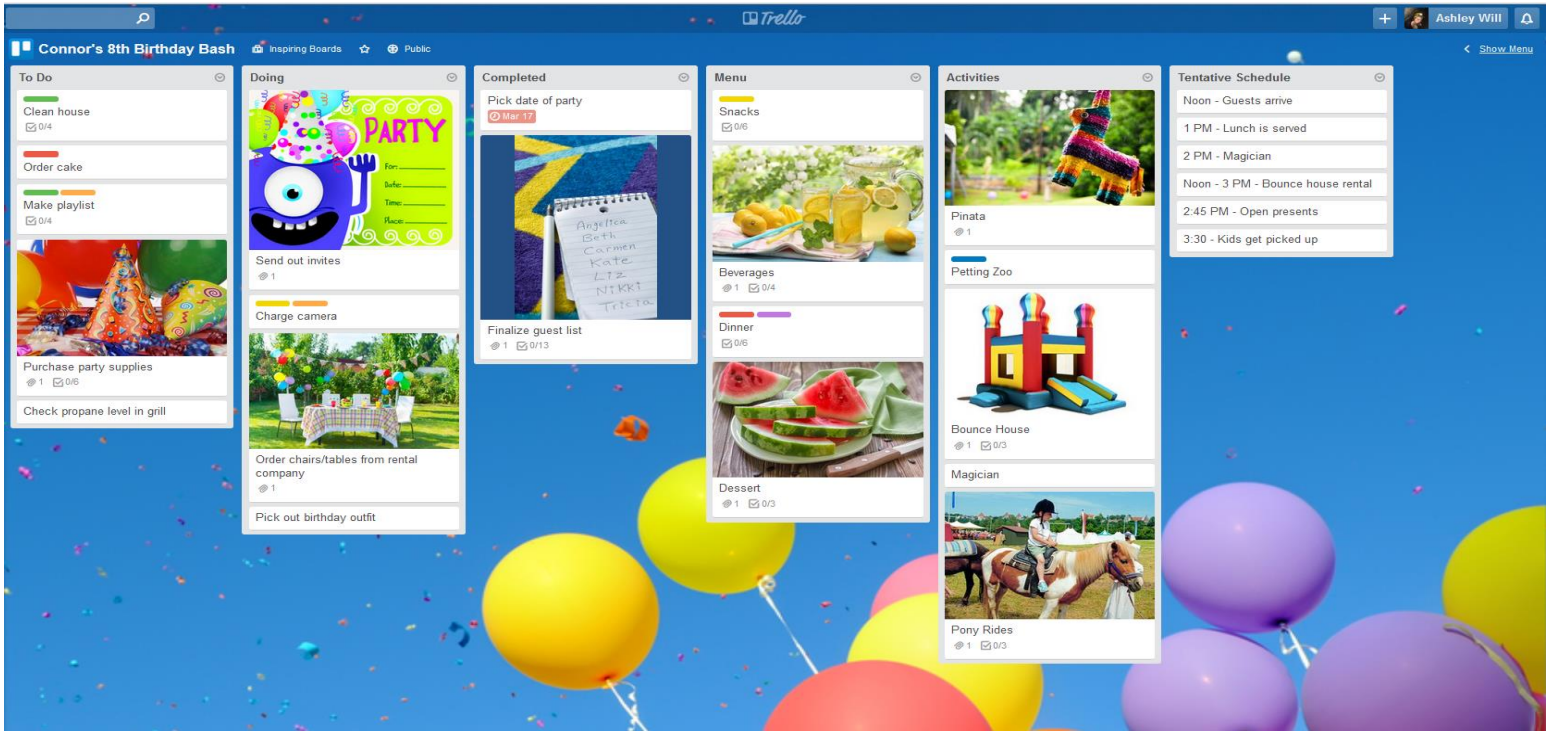
Useful for Librarians

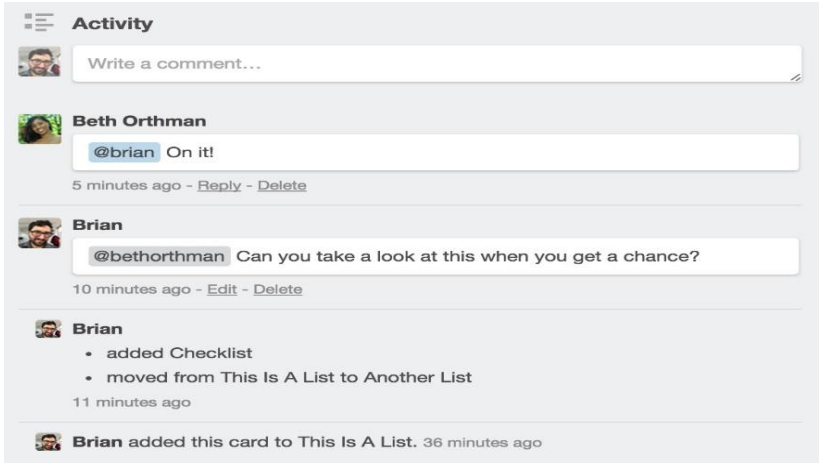
- Trello is like a digital collaborative bulletin board. You can structure your boards and lists in any way.
- Trello is useful to librarians because it could help a staff organize a project in a fun way.
- Looking at the progression of cards on a board gives you an overview of a project's progress, and each card lays out a portion of the work. Trello boards can have as many members as you need. You could use if you are making a big presentation with your team at work, or if you are planning a potluck dinner with friends or coworkers.
- Here's an example of Trello being used in a work setting where you can see staff schedule, supplies needed, equipment ordered, product performance, etc.



Trello can also be used for personal use, like this example planning a birthday party, where there is a list for schedule, menu, activities, etc.



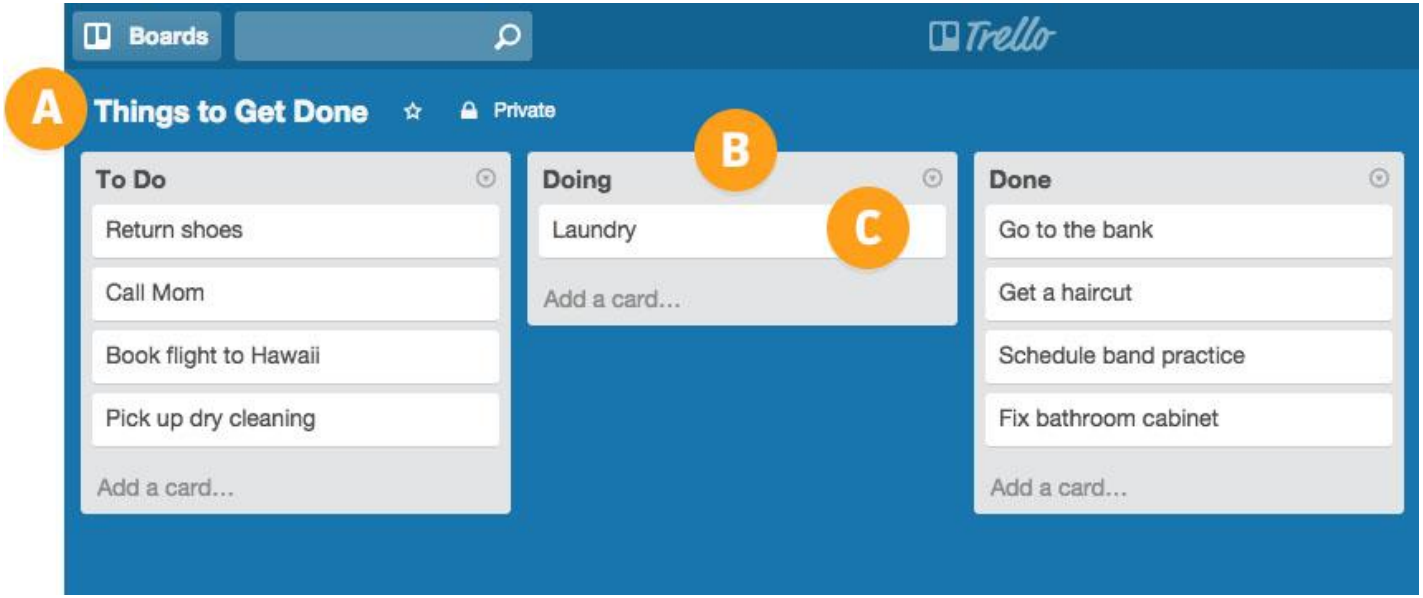
If there's important information, add a member to the card. Members can comment back and forth, and start a discussion with multiple people by simply @ mentioning them. You can also add attachments and links to the card so everything you need is in one place.

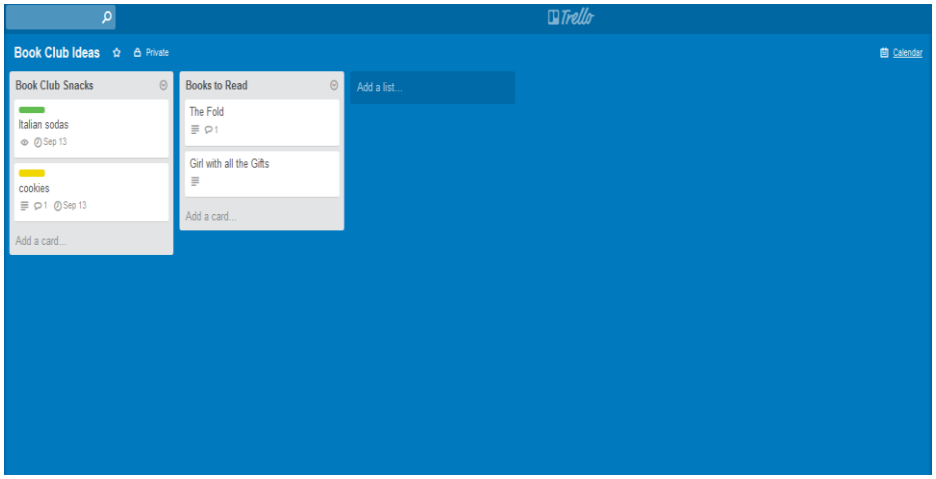


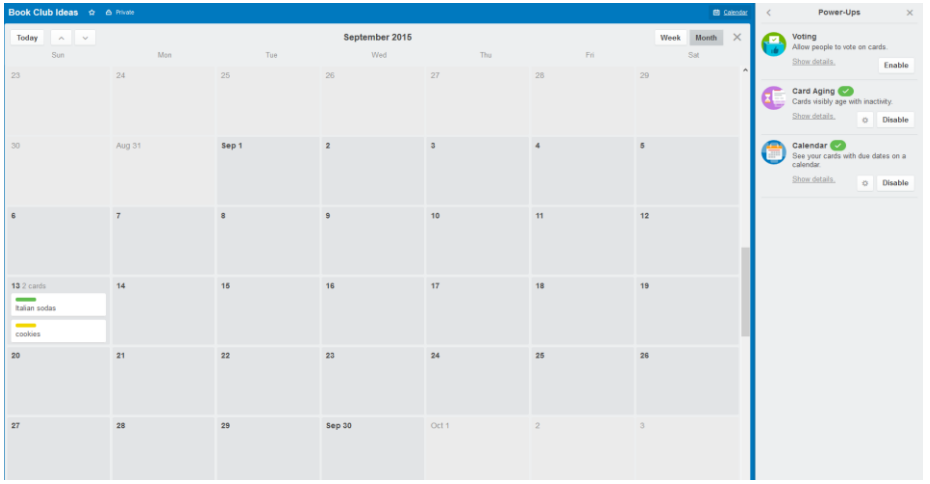
The Basics

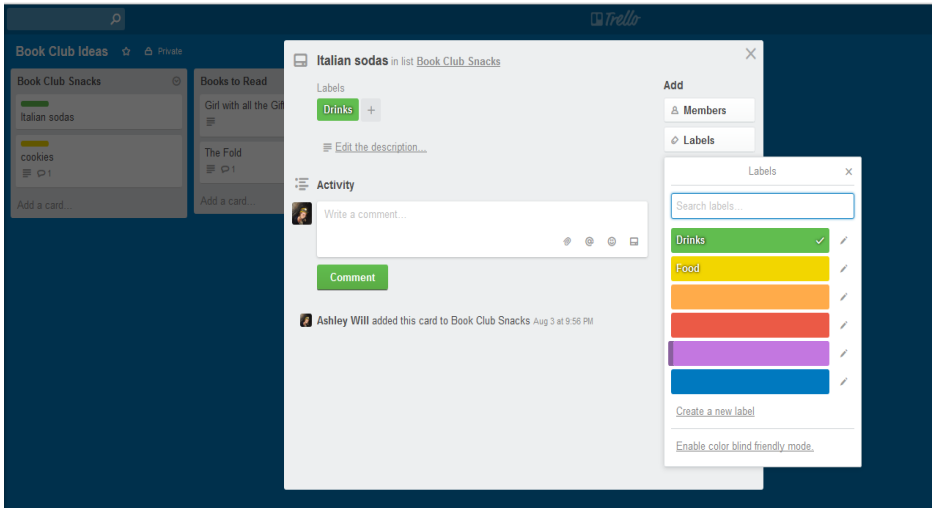
A: Boards - A board represents a project. Whether you are redesigning a kitchen or launching a new website, a Trello board is the place to organize your tasks on lists and collaborate with your team of friends, family, and colleagues.
B: Lists - Lists keep cards organized in their various stages of progress. They can be used to create a workflow, or act as a repository of ideas. Cards can be moved across lists as tasks go from start to finish.
C: Cards - The fundamental unit of a board is a card. Cards are used to represent tasks and ideas: something that needs to get done, like a grocery list, or to be remembered, like a book recommendation. There is no limit to the amount of cards you can add to a board.

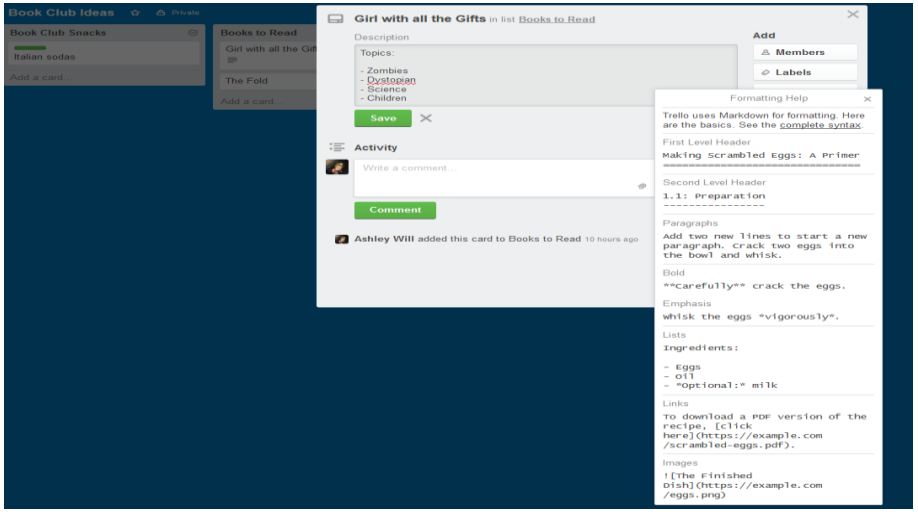
By default, boards are set to private but you can change the privacy type to public or organization.







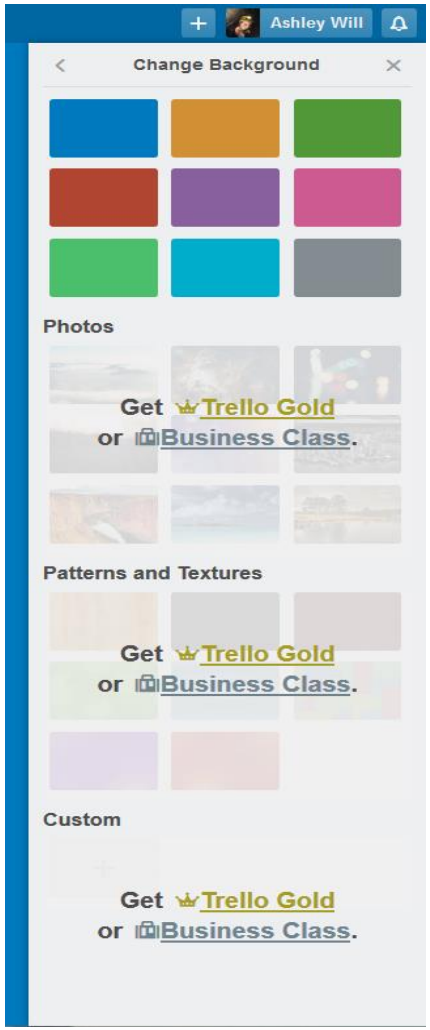


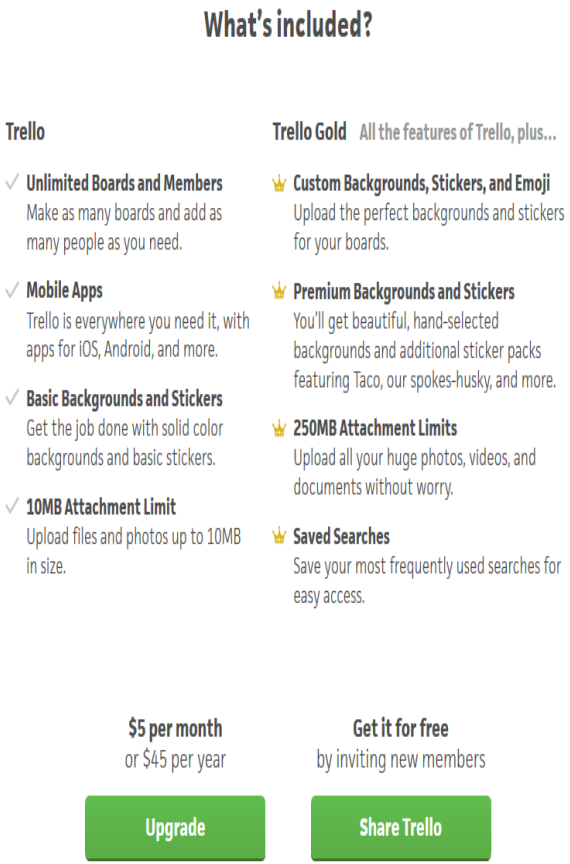


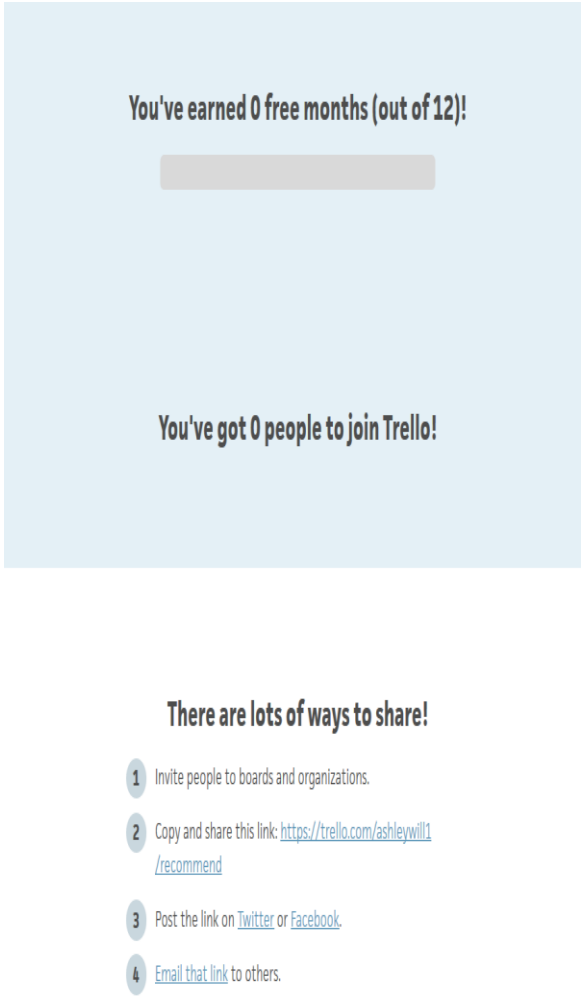
You can add different elements to your cards, including board members; labels for filtering and data visualization; and due dates to cards for projects that have deadlines. I began a color-coding system for food and drinks on my board. You can be creative and make a labeling key however you would like for you to label cards on your board. Multiple colors can even be used for the same card.

To add details to your card click “Edit the description” at the top of the card after clicking on it. In the description field you can add more specific information about your card. You can format your text with Markdown. By clicking on Formatting help, you can learn how to use it. With an example I did, I created bullet points by using hyphens.

Basic Trello is free, but you must subscribe to Trello Gold, by paying or convincing others to join Trello, to have more features, such as the ability to upload large attachments and to have backgrounds with photos, patterns, and textures. As you can see, when I made my board, I could only have colors as my background.







Trello works on your device, wherever you are.

project noah

Project Noah is a tool to explore and document wildlife and a platform to harness the power of citizen scientists everywhere.

Join Project Noah Today

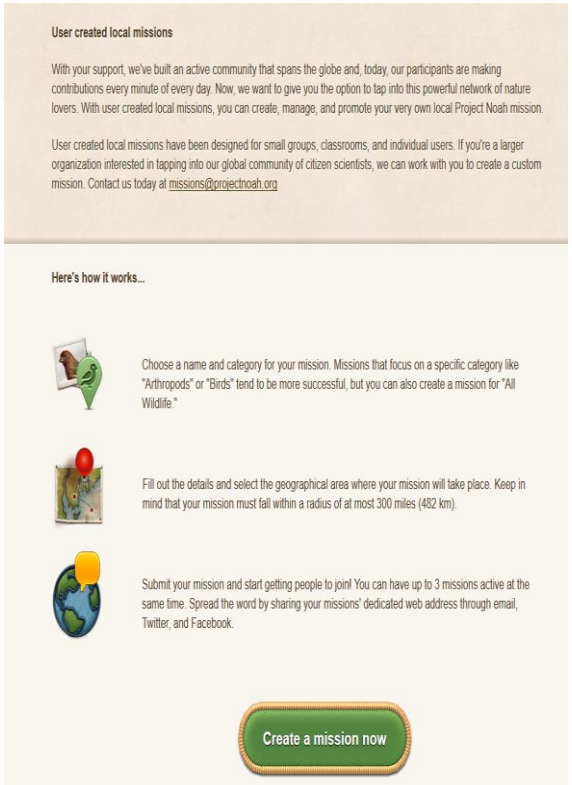
Discover thousands of organisms from around the world.

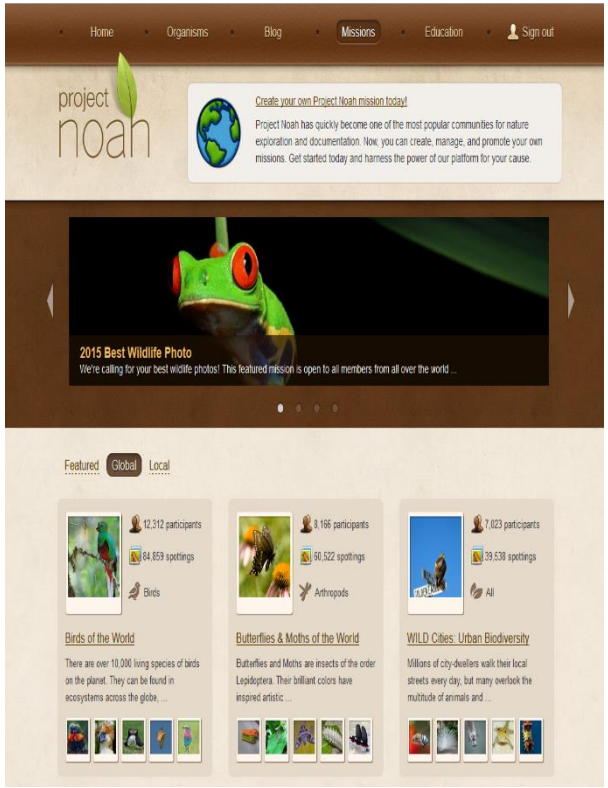
Document nature with your mobile phone.

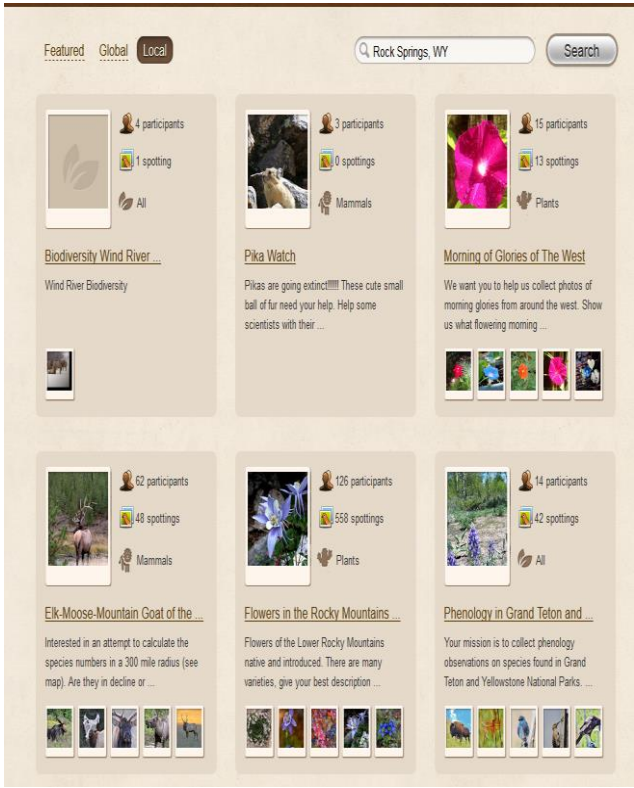
Help scientists with ongoing research.

What is it?

- Launched out of New York University's Interactive Telecommunications Program in early 2010, the project began as an experiment to mobilize citizen scientists
- Backed by National Geographic, Project Noah is mobilizing a new generation of nature explorers and helping people from around the world appreciate their local wildlife.
- You can join missions that others have created or make one of your own.
- An example of a Global Mission is Birds of the World
- When I searched for Rock Springs, WY, an example of a local mission in the area is Flowers in the Rocky Mountains



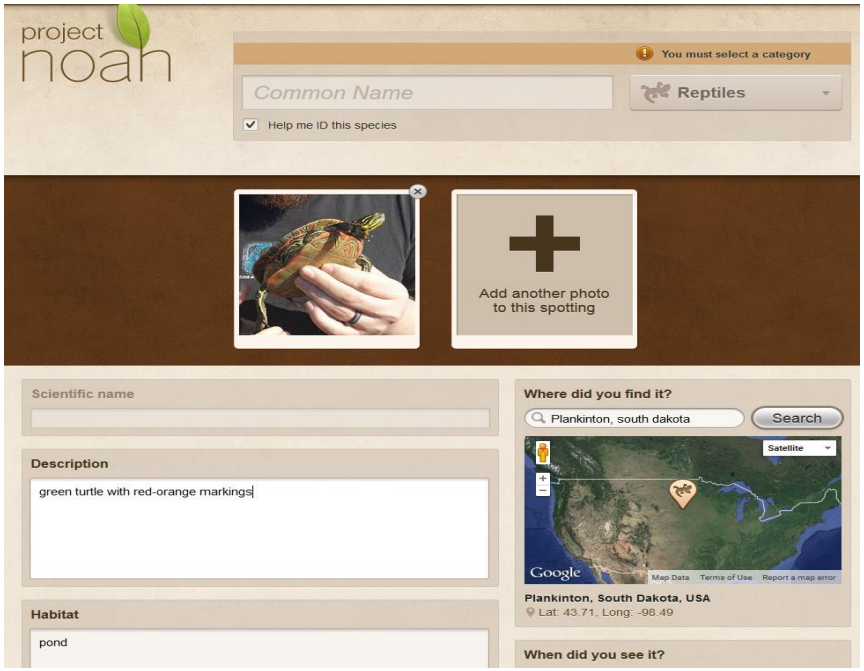


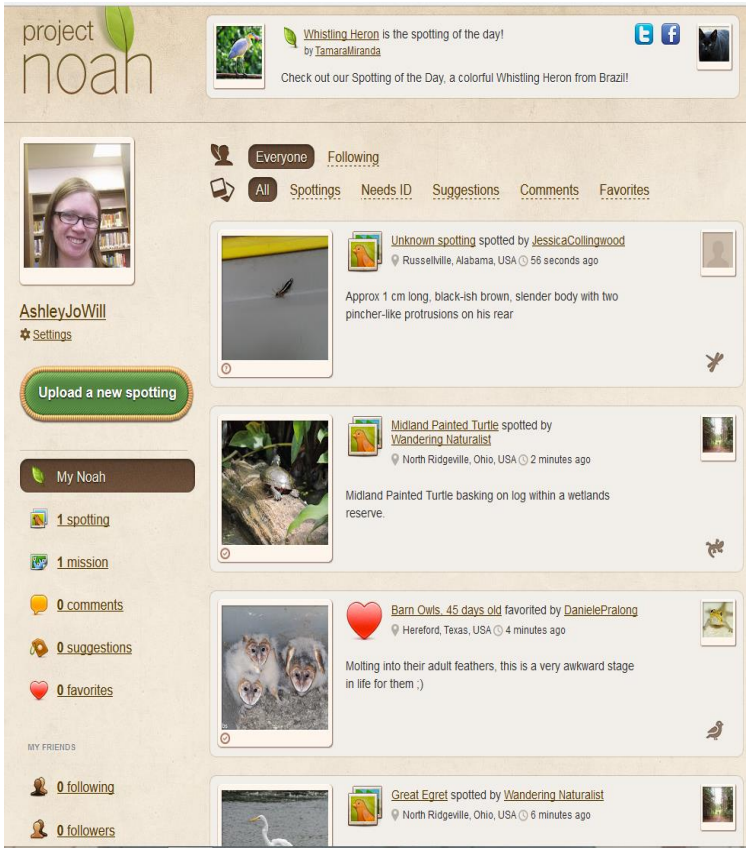


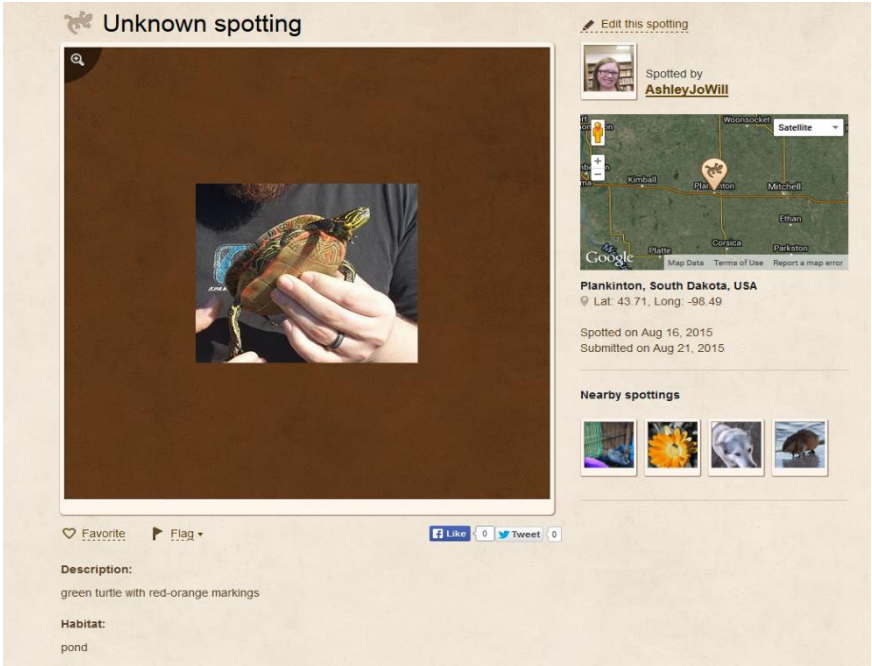
Useful for librarians:

- There is an ability for teachers to set up student accounts and classroom missions. In addition to teachers, this would be a great program for school librarians and youth services librarians to utilize.
- By encouraging young adults to share their observations and contribute to Project Noah missions, you help them reconnect with nature and provide them with real opportunities to make a difference with missions.
- Once you're registered as a teacher, you can create a new place-based mission for your students. The students will document the world around them and understand the importance of biodiversity. This could also be a program set up at a library and the students can be the program members.
- Project Noah makes it easy for you to manage your created missions and keep track of your students' observations. You can download your class's (or program's) contributions at any time and even drop them into Google Earth.

It's easy to make an account and upload a spotting. Fill in what you know with your picture such as description, where you found it, when you saw it, etc. When you upload a spotting, if you don't know the common name, you can checkmark "Help me ID this species" like I did. Now another user can help me identify this turtle I found.







Apps:

- The website says that there is an app available for both Apple and Android
- My Noah is your Project Noah mobile home page.
- Manage all your spottings from your mobile device. Your spottings are viewable in a list view or grid view and it's easy to submit new spottings or edit existing ones.

Canoso Miniature Books Exhibition

This is the caption under "Hot to Collect Miniature Books" image

The Michael Canoso Miniature Book Collection was donated to the UW Libraries in 2007 by Michael Canoso. It includes books smaller than 3 inches by 3 inches as well as a selection of artists' books, some pieces of which date from as early as 1844. A variety of subjects are represented from rock art to botanical specimens. Cataloged items can be browsed in the UW Libraries Catalog here "Canoso Miniature Book."

Beautiful newsletters in minutes? You bet.

Looking for a fast and easy way to communicate with your customers?
Get stylish, effective results in 5 minutes or less.

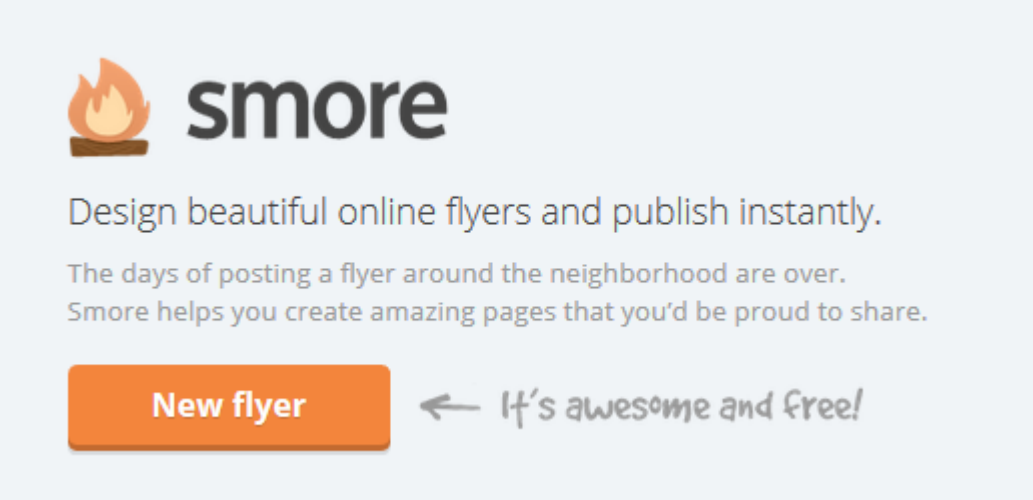
Try Smore now (it's free)

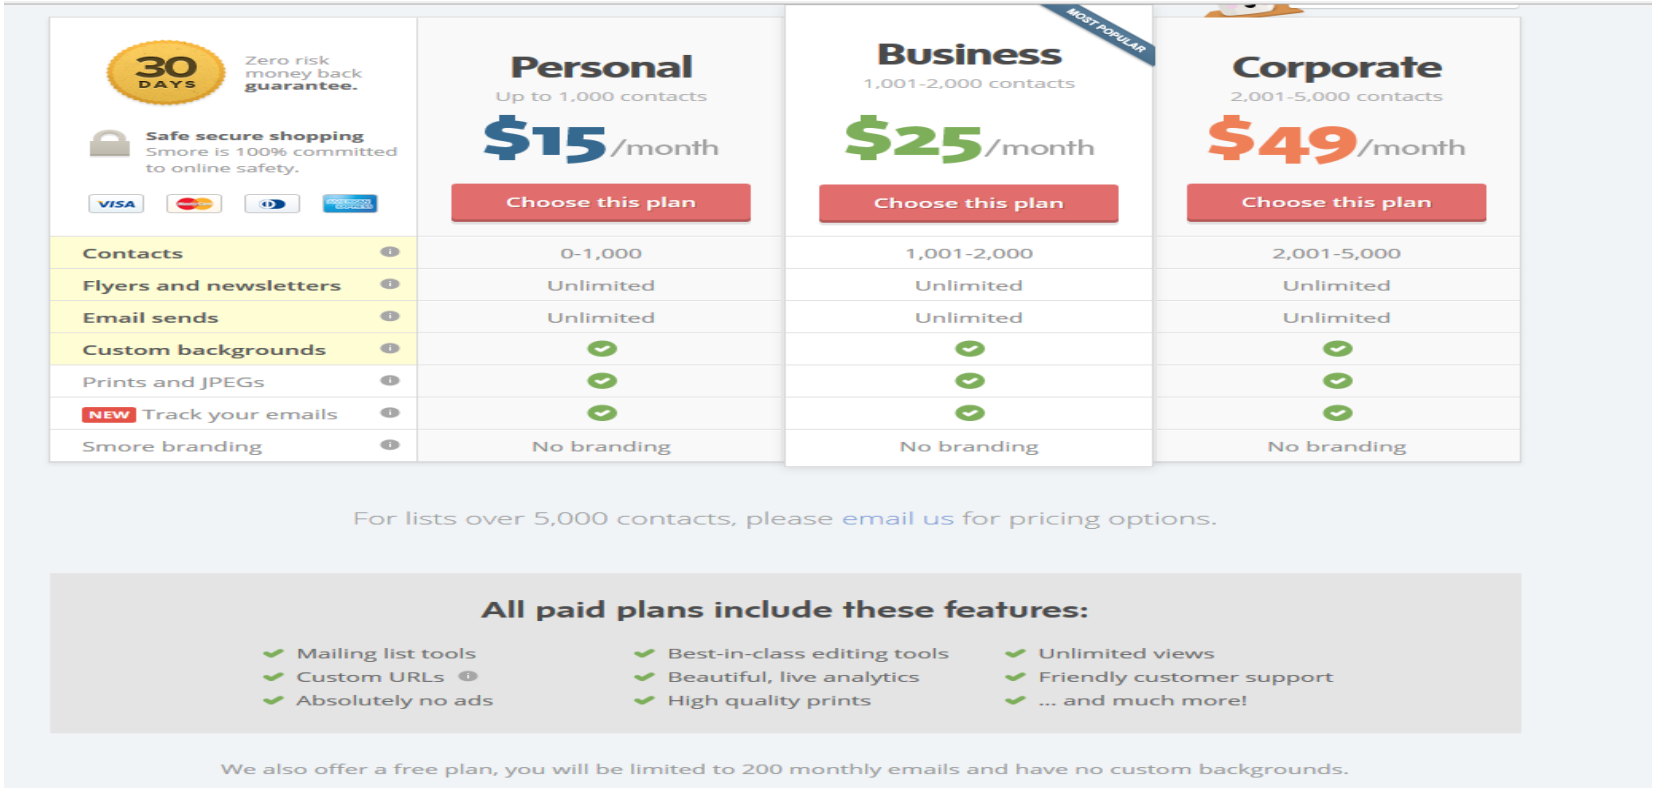
The simplest designer on the market, and pretty too.

Smore makes you look like a pro every time. Even if you have zero design experience.

Smore is a simple way to design stylish newsletters.

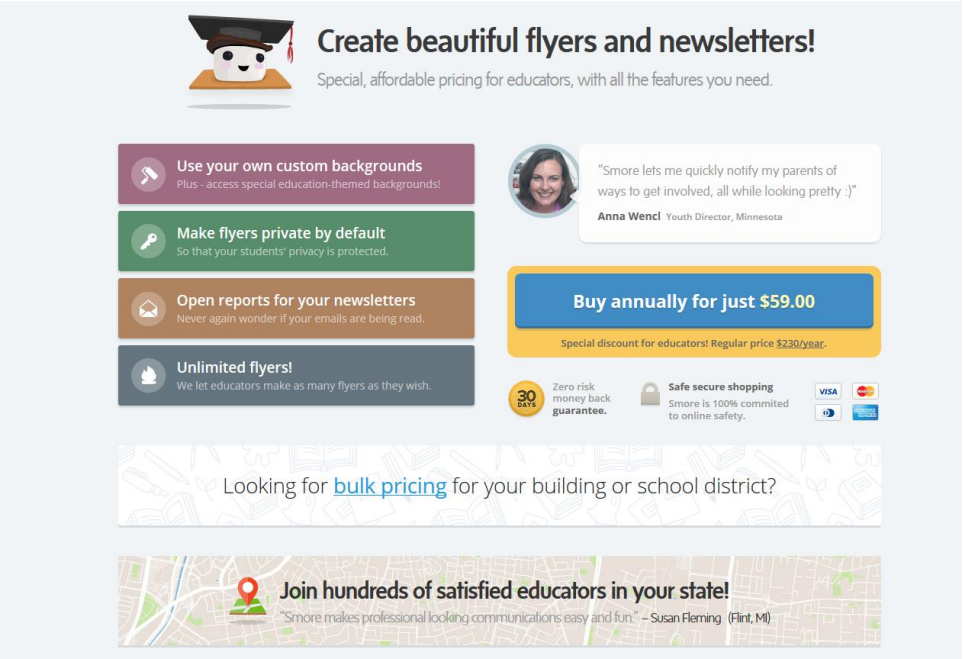
- Oftentimes, librarians make posters for programs and Smore could help them stick out.
- You can use Smore for free, like I am doing, but you will be limited to 200 monthly emails and have no custom backgrounds. There are different plans to choose from, as well as special plans and pricing for educators.

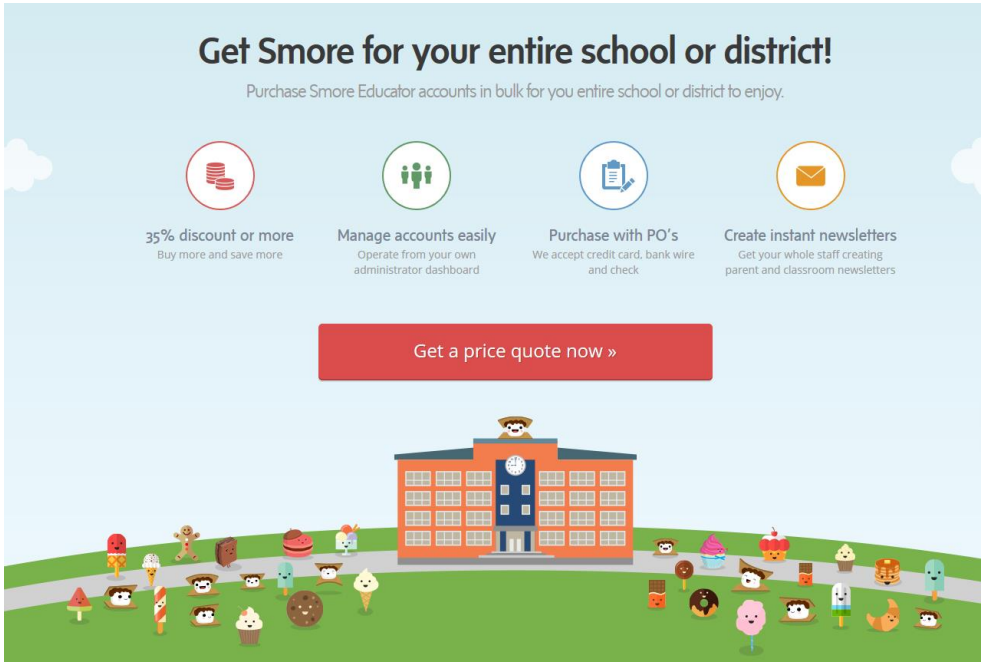




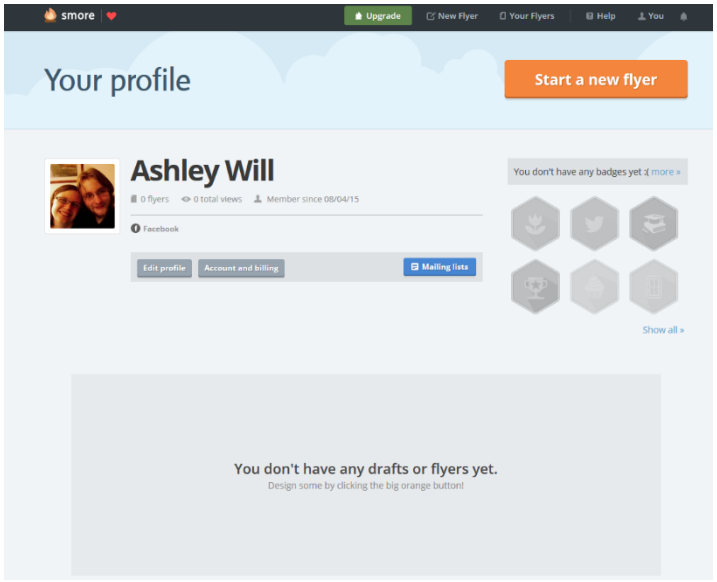
Great for librarians to use!

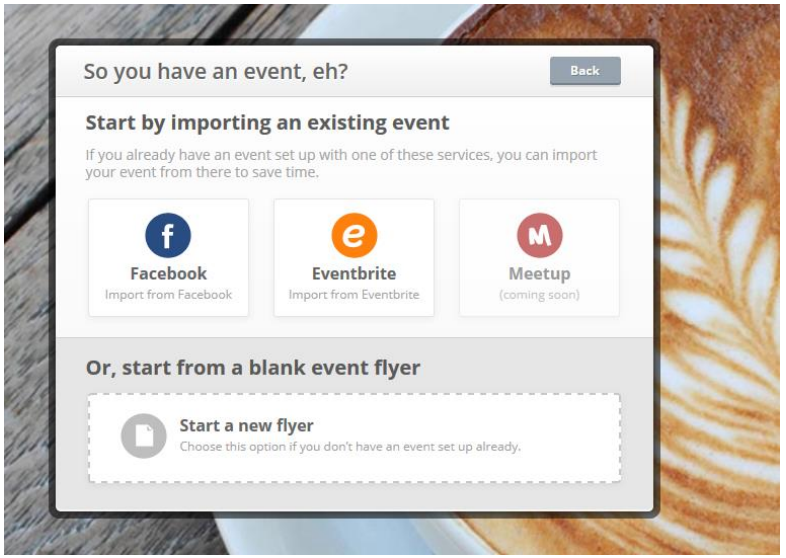
- In the frequently asked questions section, Smore explicitly says that librarians are included in the teacher category. The website says, “The Educator plan is meant for teachers, librarians, consultants, church members, parents, volunteers, or anyone who will use Smore for educational purposes. As long as you're "in education" and you're not selling anything …

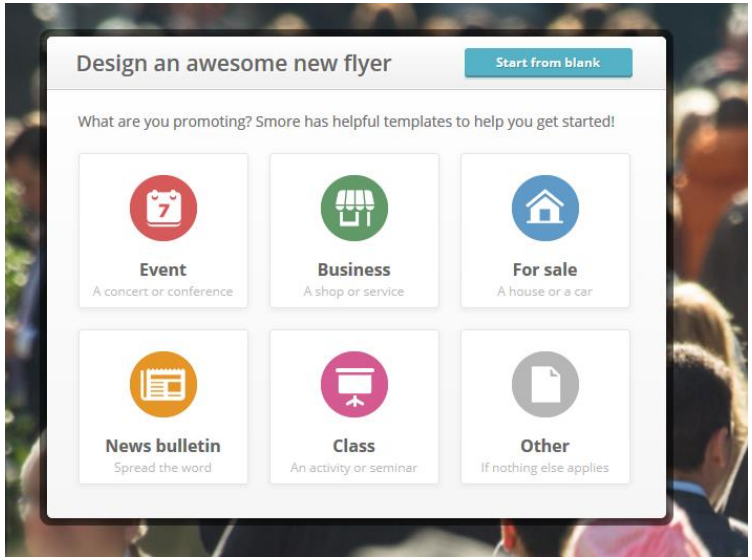


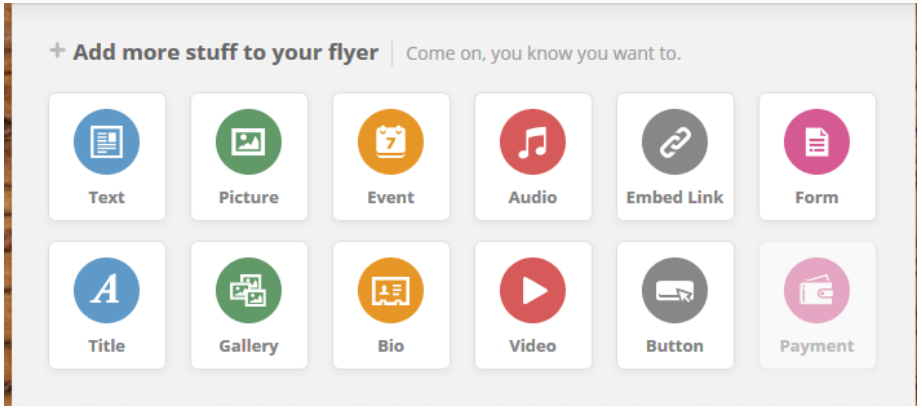


- It is very easy to begin making an account and a poster. You can either start fresh or import an event from services such as Facebook.

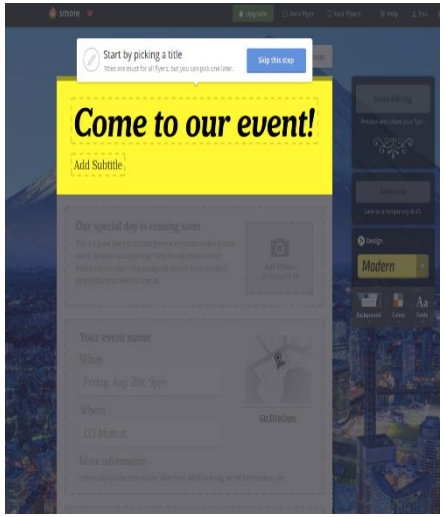


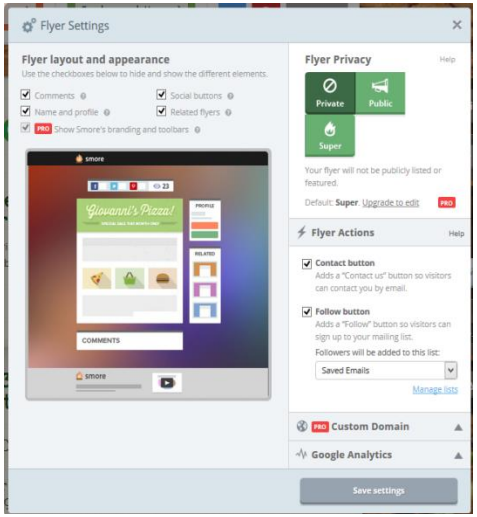


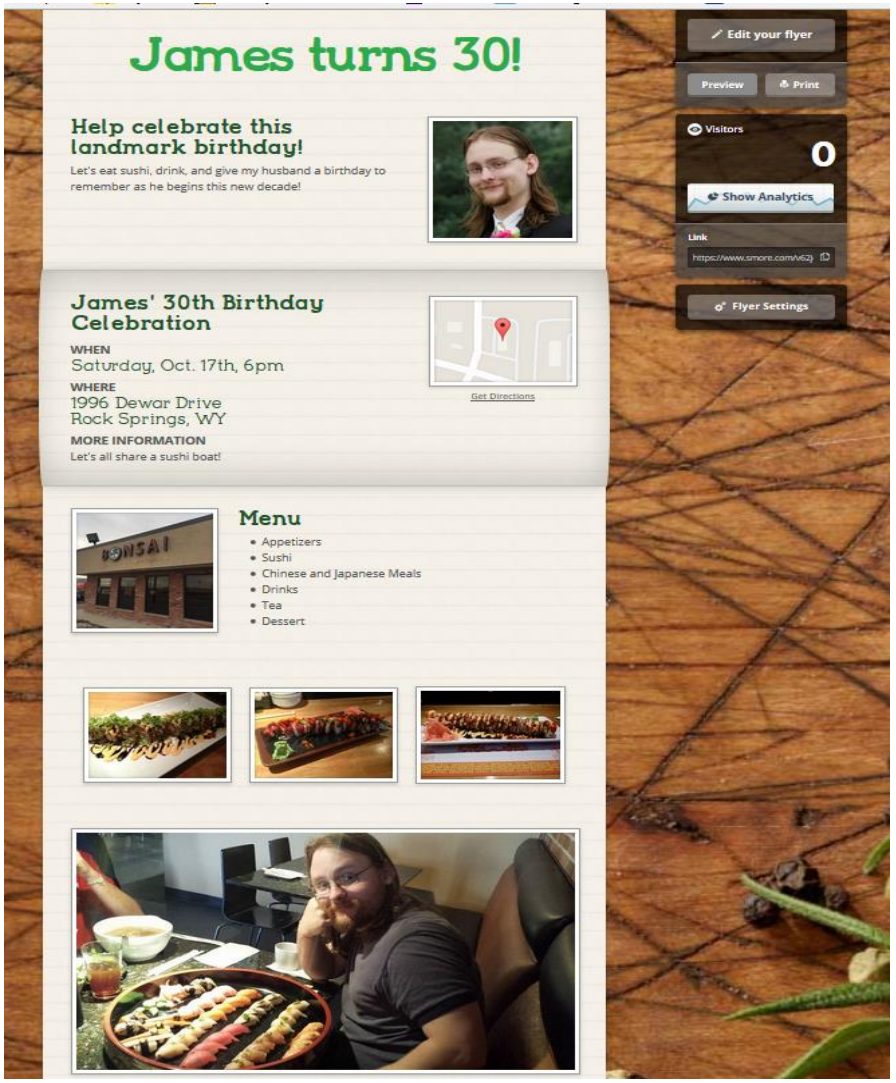


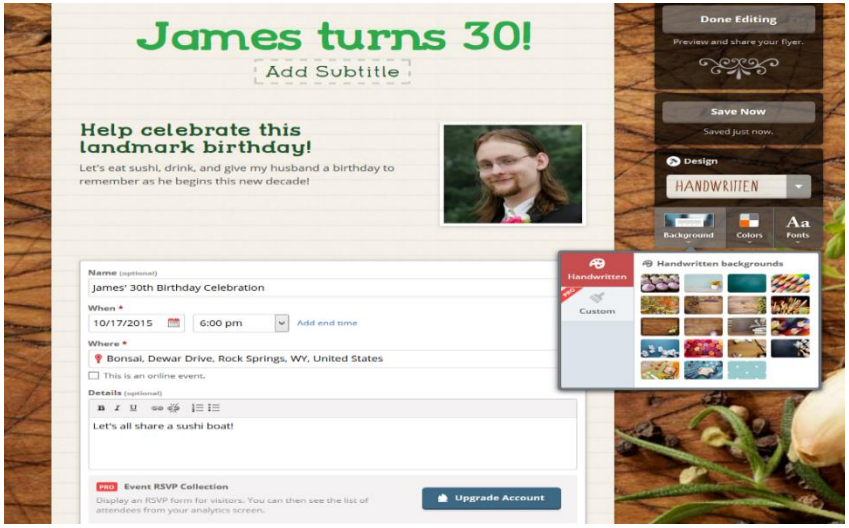


- It is very easy to begin making a poster. You'll see where there are restrictions since I'm playing with Smore with a free account. There are several backgrounds to choose from, but you can only customize backgrounds with your own images if you have an upgraded account. Also, I can only display an RSVP form for visitors if I upgrade my account.
- You can click on flyer settings to change things such as flyer privacy; adding a contact button; containing a follow button; comment section; social media buttons, and more. If you had a Pro edition, you could remove the Smore's branding and toolbars, as well as have a custom domain









Sharing and Analyzing such as time spent looking at flyer: you either need Pro or 30 views to unlock Analytics

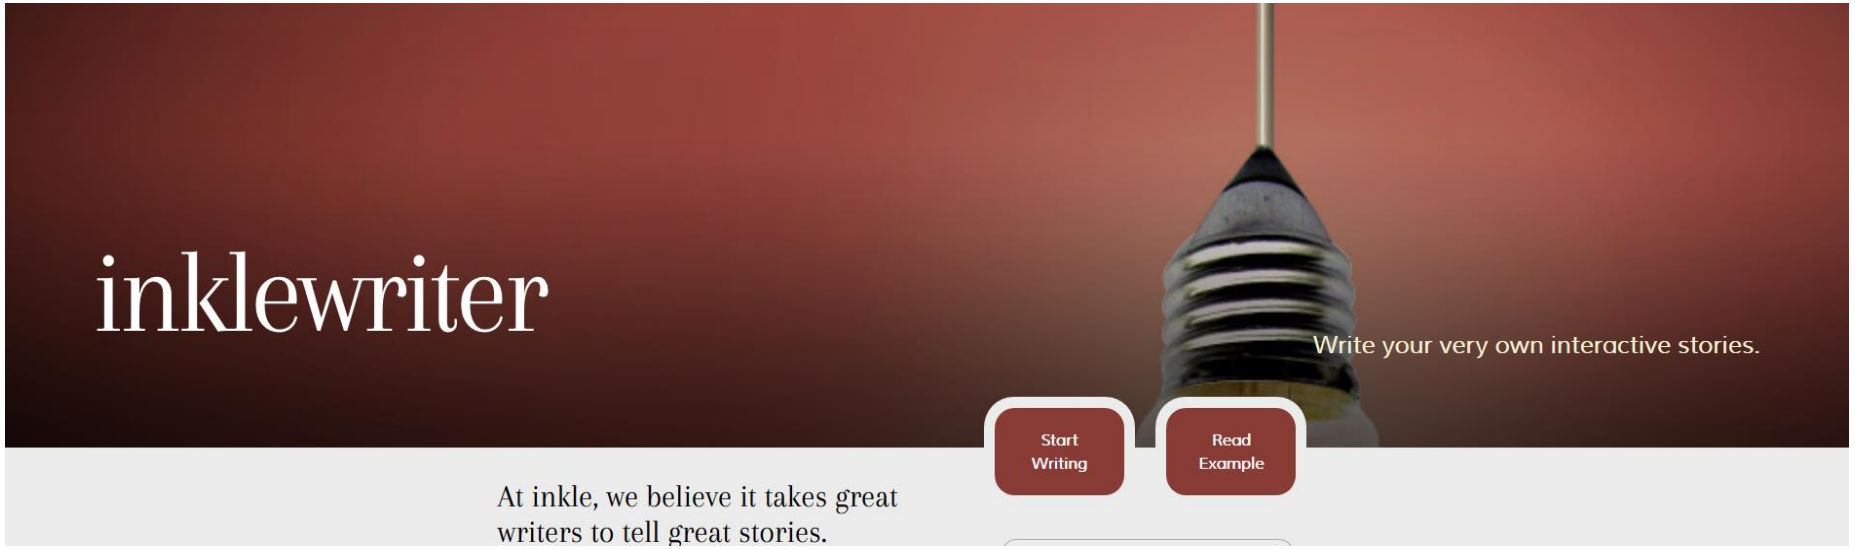
inklewriter

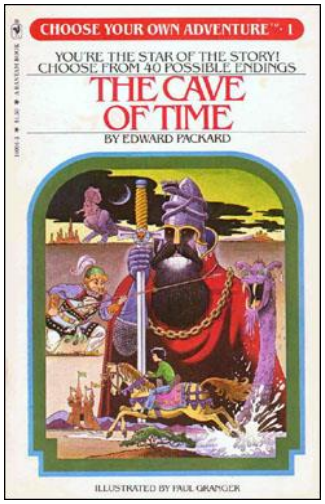
www.inklestudios.com/inklewriter

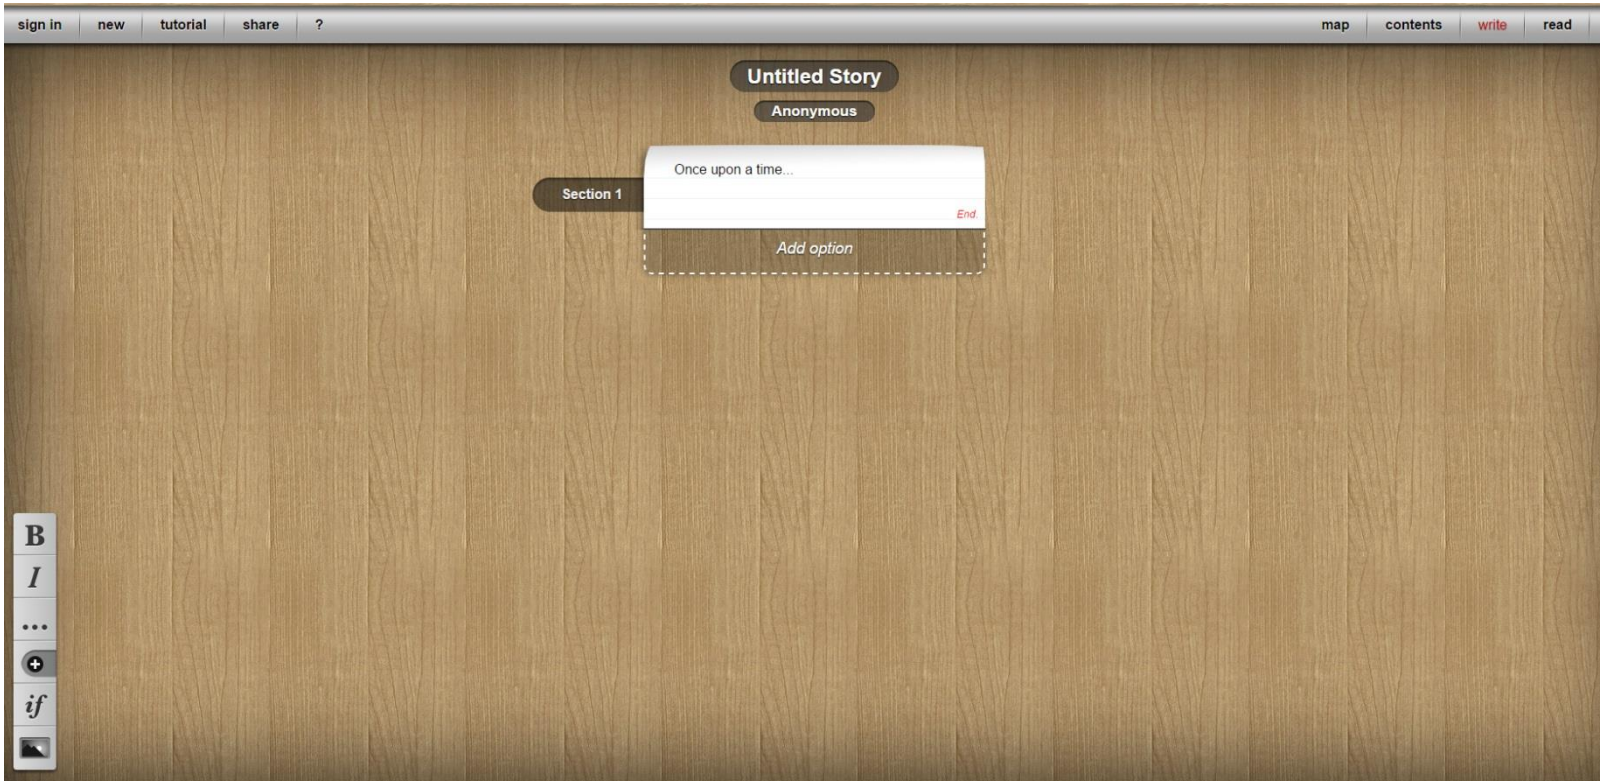


inklewriter
Write your very own interactive stories.
Start Writing
Read Example
At inkle, we believe it takes great writers to tell great stories.

Inklewriter allows the user to write interactive stories. You may be reminded of the Choose Your Own Adventure books where there were dozens of possible endings.

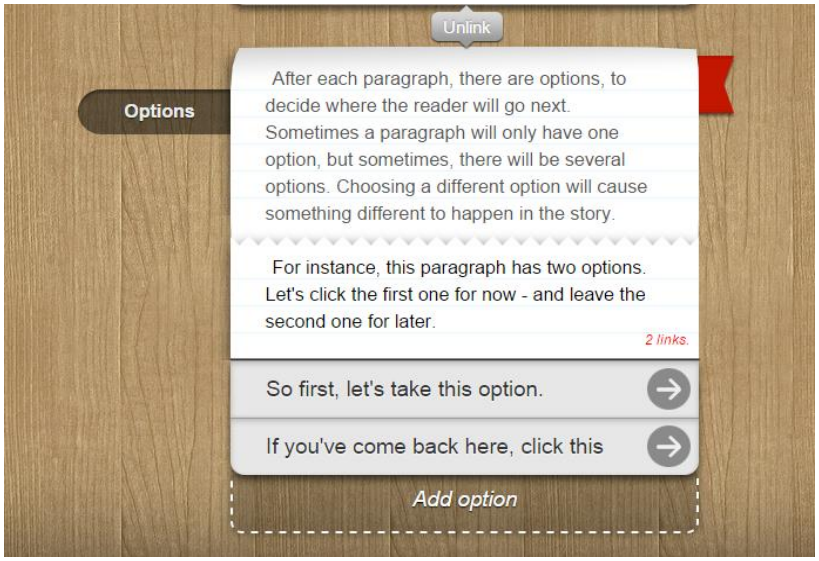
Librarians could easily utilize this website in a story-writing program at a library for young adults or adults.

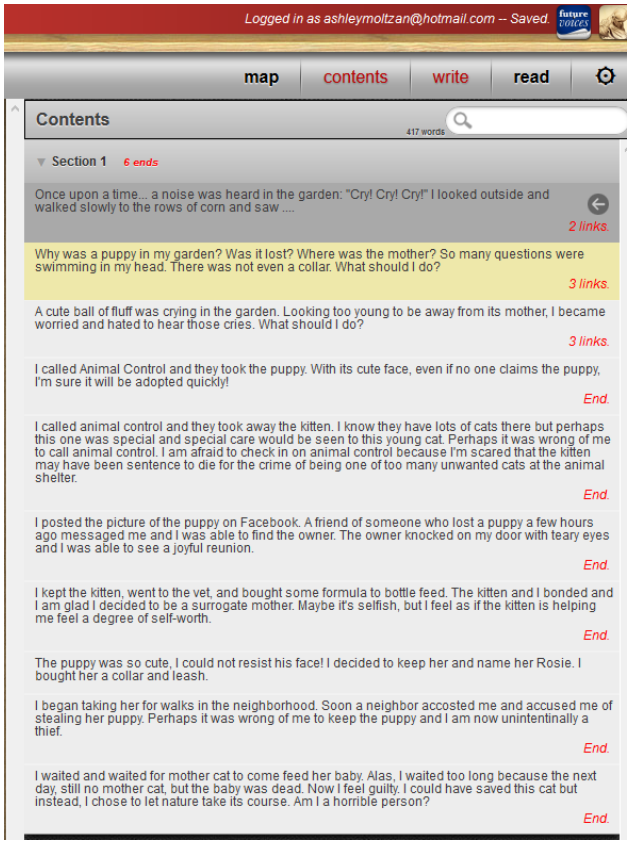




The reader and writer work together to tell a story.

Interactive stories are made up of paragraphs of text, like this tutorial example, and options, which let the reader choose what to read next. In inklewriter, paragraphs of text appear on scraps of paper and you can type into them directly. After each paragraph, there are options to decide where the reader will go next. Sometimes a paragraph will only have one option, but sometimes, there will be several options. Choosing a different option will cause something different to happen in the story. This option you choose leads to a paragraph that is connected to the previous one, and if you look back at the previous paragraph, you can see it says it has "2 links". That's to help you keep track of where the story branches.





See where it says "Add option". Just click that and it'll make a new blank option for you. Type in the option's text, and then press the arrow to start a new paragraph.

The Contents is where every bit of text you write is stored away, ready for when you might need it. The Contents helps you find your way around the story, joins up its branches, notifies you of any loose ends and keeps you organized. Contents can be found in the top right of the menu bar.

When you finish a story, you can click share to find the unique URL for your story. Then others can read your interactive story, like I made as an example.
